Am I now required to restore my building?

- No. Except in cases of extreme neglect, the Historical Commission cannot require a property owner to undertake work, and may only review a scope of work defined by the owner.
- Alterations in place at the time of designation, such as vinyl windows, are grandfathered and may be retained until the owner determines that they need replacement.

FAQs
Philadelphia Historical Commission

Does the Historical Commission regulate signage?

- Yes, the Historical Commission requires a property owner to submit an application for new signage.
- The Historical Commission recognizes the evolution, diversity and commercial nature of the in Jewelers' Row signage as a character defining feature.
- Signage in place at the time of designation is grandfathered and may be retained until the owner determines a need for replacement.

FAQs Philadelphia Historical

Can I make changes to my storefront?

- Yes. The owner can make changes to storefronts that are historically appropriate for their building and the surrounding district.
- Storefronts in place at the time of designation are grandfathered and may be retained until the owner determines the need for replacement or updating.
- The Historical Commission cannot require a property owner to undertake work, and may only review a scope of work defined by the owner.

Can I demolish my building in a historic district?

- Generally, no. To secure a demolition permit for a historic building, an applicant must prove either that there is no feasible reuse for the building, or that demolition is necessary in the public interest.
- Demolition may also be permitted in instances when Licenses & Inspections has cited a property as "imminently dangerous" and has determined that demolition is the only means of safely abating the dangerous condition.

Does the Historical Commission regulate the use of buildings?

 No. The Historical Commission has no jurisdiction over the use of historically designated buildings, and it encourages adaptive reuse of buildings.

FAQs Philadelphia Historical

Does the Commission review work to the rear of a building?

- The Historical Commission's jurisdiction extends over the entire exterior envelope of a building, but the Commission concentrates its reviews on facades, roofs, and site features that are visible from the public right-of-way.
- If the rear of your building is not visible from the public right-of-way, the staff has the authority to be lenient in its review of proposed alterations, but is still required to stamp a building permit application for the scope of work.

FAQs Philadelphia Historical

Does historic designation affect my tax assessment?

- No. The Office of Property Assessment has confirmed that historic designation does not play a role in property assessments.
- Size, amenities, location, condition, and use are factors that impact property assessments, and thus property taxes.

Does historic designation affect my property insurance?

- No. Location, age, materials, and updates are key factors in determining insurance premiums.
- Historic designation is not a question used to determine insurance rates.
- Cost to ensure older homes is higher across the board because older homes were typically constructed with higher-quality materials and features, and therefore are more costly to rebuild, assuming an owner wishes to rebuild with similar quality and finishes.

Can the Historical Commission require me to do something I cannot afford?

- No. The Historical Commission does not have the authority to require anything that would create an unreasonable or undue economic hardship for you.
- The Historic Preservation Ordinance authorizes the Commission to relax and/or disregard its preservation standards in cases of economic hardship.
- The Commission and its advisory Committee on Financial Hardship evaluate claims of hardship.

Is the Historical Commission's regulation of my property unconstitutional or constitute a "taking"?

- No. Both federal and state courts have ruled that governmental actions under historic preservation laws that prevent landowners from realizing the highest and best use of their property are not unconstitutional.
- Most cities and towns regulate private property for historic preservation reasons.

Is a listing on the Philadelphia Register of Historic Places different from a listing on the National Register?

- Yes. The National Register of Historic Places is a nationwide list of historically significant properties administered by the National Park Service.
- The Philadelphia Register of Historic Places is unrelated to the National Register.
- Properties can be listed on both Registers.

Why would I want my property listed on the Philadelphia Register?

- Satisfaction derived from stewardship of a historic landmark.
- Community pride fostered by recognition of the historic district.
- Property values in historic districts fluctuate less and increase more than those of comparable properties outside of historic districts.
- The Historical Commission provides historical and technical assistance to property owners without charge.
- Mayor's Preservation Task Force is currently exploring incentive programs for designated properties.
